ONE STATION ENDS. THE NEXT STARTS FRESH.

A typical MMI circuit has independent stations. Your invitation, not a generic diagram, sets the real format and timing.

1 Confirm the circuit
Check in or log in as instructed. Know your starting station, reading time, station time and signal to move.

▼

2 Read the new prompt
Typical page guide: 1–2 minutes. Name the issue, stakeholders and an opening approach.

▼

3 Enter and respond
Typical page guide: 5–10 minutes. Explain reasoning clearly and empathetically; allow follow-ups or new information.

▼

4 Stop and rotate
Follow the signal and local instructions. Move to the next room or virtual station without carrying the last answer forward.

▼

5 Reset and repeat
Repeat the read, respond, rotate loop until every assigned station is complete. Each station is independently assessed.

Typical, not fixed
The source describes about 6–10 stations, but schools may use fewer or longer stations.

What is assessed
Communication, ethics, motivation, teamwork, cultural safety and situational judgement — not science recall.

> Scores are combined for ranking. Online delivery follows the same independent-station idea; follow the invitation's actual platform and process.
